Canadian Centre for Caregiving Excellence: A National Voice on Care

Since its inception, CCCE has established itself as the national voice on care, breaking down barriers between the aging, disability and healthcare sectors to build a stronger, more unified care movement.

Among its many achievements, CCCE has twice convened the Canadian Caregiving Summit, brought together 40 organizations through a Care Champions Table, deepened national understanding of caregiving and the care economy through its data-driven Caring in Canada reports (2024, 2026), co-designed a National Caregiving Strategy and helped move caregiving into federal policy conversations through the National Caregiving Caucus, which includes representatives from all major political parties.

Throughout its transition to independence, and as a registered charity, CCCE will continue to fund programs and initiatives to support caregivers and care providers in Canada while expanding its role as a national funder, convener, researcher and advocate. The new commitment from Waltons Trust includes dedicated funding for grants to organizations that support older adults and their caregivers.

Becoming a registered charity will allow CCCE to deepen its partnerships across sectors to address the most pressing issues facing unpaid caregivers and paid care providers in Canada. This includes advocating for:

- Better financial supports;
- Stronger workplace protections;
- Recognition of caregivers as partners in care;
- Improved access to community-based supports; and
- A more sustainable care provider workforce.
